Winemaking After the manual harvest of the white grapes they were pressed in a wooden basket press, operated manually. The must was filtered in a wicker basket and sent to fill the wooden barrels up to 80% of their capacity (550 litres). The fermentation started spontaneously without adding any yeast. The red grapes were manually harvested and quickly transported to the winery where they were destemmed and crushed into an open wooden vat. The spontaneous fermentation was done in contact with the skin (maceration) for 8 days. Two or three times per day, the skins (cap) were submerged using a wooden instrument called "rodo". On the 8th day, almost at the end of the fermentations, the red must with the skins, was added into the wooden barrels where the white must was fermenting. This procedure filled up the remaining free capacity (20%) of the barrels.

Colour Very light ruby.

Aroma Complexity of yellow pulp fruit and red berries.

Palate Full, sharp, fresh and complex mouth.

Gastronomy Drink with moderation at 13°C – 14°C. Soft to drink but with a high alcoholic content, this wine is a very complex combination of red and white characteristics, making it an extraordinary gastronomic experience.

Recommended Storage Well-ventilated and dark place (+/- 60% humidity). Horizontally at around 15°C.
